The English-language pangram phrase, shown in the metallic type used in the printing presses (image cancelled for readability) The Fast Brown Fox jumps over a lazy dog - this is an English-speaking pangram - a sentence that contains all the letters of the English alphabet. Due to its brevity and consistency, it has become widely known. The phrase is commonly used for touch-typing practices, testing typewriters and computer keyboards, displaying examples of fonts and other text-related applications where the use of all letters in the alphabet is desirable. Story Item of February 9, 1885, the edition of The Boston Journal mentions the phrase Fast Brown Fox jumping over a lazy dog. The earliest known appearance of the phrase from The Boston Journal. In an article titled Current Notes in the February 9, 1885 edition, the phrase is referred to as a good practice sentence for writing students: Favorite copy set by writing teachers for their students is the following because it contains every letter of the alphabet: A fast brown fox jumps through a lazy dog. Dozens of other newspapers published the phrase over the next few months, using a version of the sentence, starting with A rather than The. The earliest known use of the phrase, beginning with The, refers to Linda Bronson's 1888 book Illustrative Reduction. The modern form (starting with The) has become more common, despite the fact that it is slightly longer than the original (starting with A). As the use of typewriters grew in the late 19th century, the phrase began to appear in the printing of lesson books as a practice proposal. Early examples include How to Become an Expert in Typewriter: A Complete Instructor Designed Specifically for the Remington Typewriter (1890), and a typewriter and handwriting instructor for the Stenographer (1892). By the turn of the 20th century, this phrase had become widely known.
